Warley Bus Service (article by Jools Townsend)

What do you love most about Warley? We moved here last year and a big attraction was the beautiful, peaceful surroundings, combined with decent transport connections. For us, like many, public transport is vital, giving us access to work and leisure opportunities, while enabling us to live sustainably. But it's also a worry that our crucial bus services could be cut.

Through my work in the voluntary sector, I know how important public transport is to so many people, especially those on low incomes, young people, elderly people, and people with disabilities or vulnerabilities. It's also often overlooked how essential buses and trains (alongside walking, wheeling and cycling) are to tackling the climate crisis. Transport is now the biggest cause of greenhouse emissions in the UK, the lion's share from cars, hence it's estimated that we need to reduce private car use by at least 25% by 2030.

Using our buses is also important to protecting them: many communities have seen major bus service cuts following drops in use. This makes them less viable for those who depend on them, and makes the shift to more climate-safe travel harder. The best way we can ensure Warley continues to benefit from regular, sustainable public transport (while doing our bit for local and global environments) is by using it.
